How it works Thousands of kids have have rated hundreds of books. Their rating is not only a matter of some stars. No, their ratings have extra details!

Do you like rugby, play with Lego and are you 10 years old?

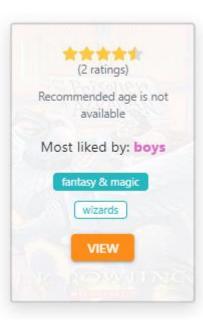

Or do you play hockey and love to collect shells?

There are always other kids like you and now you can find out what their favorite books are.

The more you tell us about yourself, the better other kids can help you.

On tap a 'reveal overlay' triggers with key features of the book.

The two labels are not clickable on purpose. At this stage you only can glance the books.

Desktop/large screen

Has an identical layout, except for the horizontal scroll boxes. These render as grids on large screens. 'Reveal overlay' now triggers when hovering over the card.

The story

This is the fourth and final milestone project of the fullstack software development course of Code Institute. It is the second 'full stack' project combining a database, a backend and a frontend. The aim is to demonstrate a full understanding of Python, Django, a SQL-based database and the usual html/css/javascript.

This project is for educational purposes only. All book images and descriptive content are from their respective owners, usually the publisher of the book.

Desktop/large screen

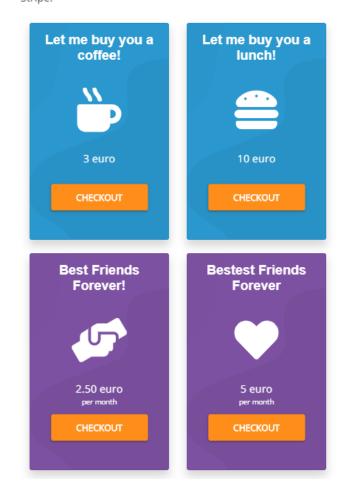

Has an identical layout, except for the horizontal scroll box. Now a regular grid.
